

June 26, 2015 - Looking down from the steel mill's signal bridge, 605 pushes his load of Kling iron carts onto one of the blast furnace tracks to move these . 5 million tons to the incinerator. There have been several changes at the Oak Park, Michigan plant over the past five years, and the company that makes the steel is now starting to use the new technology at the plant. This includes the installation of new furnaces and cooling systems. "In the past, we have used the cooling systems used in the furnaces we have built before," says plant chief executive Robert Driscoll. "This is not good for our product."
