ACME Comedy Theater ACME Comedy Theater is an improvisational comedy troupe formed in San Francisco in the early 1990s. History The troupe was originally composed of several improv professionals, including Rob Corddry, Luke Goss, Doug Stanhope, Jason Grote, and David Cross, who met at UC Berkeley's Sprott Theater. In 1995, the troupe was named "Best Comedy Improvisation Group" in the East Bay. After the Sprott closed, the troupe moved to the Magic Theater on Market Street in San Francisco. After a few years of performing in San Francisco, in 1997 they moved their troupe to Chicago. In Chicago, they helped to launch the Second City Comedy Network, a satellite television channel, of which they remained hosts and executive producers until its cancellation in 1998. In 1998, ACME Comedy Theater were co-founders of the Improv Olympic, a sketch improv troupe for which Grote, Stanhope and Cross served as writers. Many of the members are now alumni of The Groundlings, the sketch comedy troupe which originated in Los Angeles in 1979. After a total of 14 years, in 2002 the Improv Olympic split with ACME Comedy Theater to form Groundlings Theater. Over time, ACME Comedy Theater
