In the past 20 years, there has been a 50% decrease in reported deaths secondary to TBI \[[@B2]\]. Improvements in patient survival have been achieved by advances in medical and surgical care. Unfortunately, the changes in management during the study period have been predominantly technical and the equipment used to perform management has remained unchanged. Because of this, the impact of technical advances in care delivery on the outcome of patients has been largely ignored \[[@B3]\]. Due to the large patient volume, the sophisticated technology used at our facility, and the limited resources for the care of the TBI patients, the majority of our TBI patients are managed in the neurosurgical ICU. Methods ======= Patient outcome, patient selection and site of care data were collected for all adult TBI patients admitted to the neurosurgical ICU from January of 1999 to December of 2005. Noninjury subjects admitted for an elective arthroscopic surgery (with the exception of shoulder or knee arthroplasty and knee arthrodesis) were also collected during the same time period. Results ======= A total of 1268 TBI patients were admitted during the 12-year period (Table 1{ref-type="table"}). The mean age was 30.7 ± 12.3 years. Males accounted for 944 (74%) of the admissions. Patients were primarily Caucasians (739, 58%). The most commonly injured body parts were the head and face (66%) and thorax (52%). The majority of patients had no other significant injuries (75%), but 39% had multiple injuries. Non-head injuries (chest, abdomen, extremity, spine, abdomen and extremity) were seen 0cc13bf012
